

Promising Practices: Improving Relationships Between Police and our Diverse Communities

Steven Lorenzo Baileys | Inter-Cultural Association of Greater Victoria
Greater Victoria Police Diversity Advisory Committee

Stand up if....

You, a parent or a grandparent came to Canada from another country

You have a generally positive impression and/or experiences with the police in your community

You know someone who has had a negative experience with police because of their skin colour, immigration status, faith or other characteristic

You believe that police in your community should actively play a positive role in creating welcoming communities and effectively combatting racism

Promising Practices: Improving Relationships Between Police and our Diverse Communities

Community Engagement Feedback

Masjid Al-Iman Community Global Café Survey Results

What suggestions do you have to improve relationships and understanding between police and your community?

- increase police awareness and knowledge about the Muslim faith and the cultural practices observed by Muslims with classes or visits to the Mosque
- regularly and informally visit the mosque and the community in order to “socialize with” and build trust and relationships with the community
- outreach directly with Muslim youth and women to better learn about and understand the concerns of youth and women

Follow-up Report and Some Recommendations

- Organize and host police station tours and open houses for immigrant newcomers and other diverse communities
- Organize and deliver police and crime prevention information sessions at locations of diverse communities (Mosque, Temples, Associations, etc.)
- Reach out to and recruit members of diverse communities as police volunteers, reservists and regular officers
- Organize regular police-community engagement dialogues with communities
- Provide diversity and anti-bias education, training and information to police members
